7 Steps to Finding the Right EHR for Your Practice (Part 1 of 2)

Committing to an electronic medical records program is a big darn deal. Our team makes it as easy and painless as possible, but it's still an important decision and investment, no matter how you slice it. We've tried to break the process down into manageable chunks and provide guidance for your journey, whether you pick PIMSY mental health EHR or another option. The most important keys to a successful electronic records implementation are a) finding the right system for your practice and b) ensuring that your staff is thoroughly trained on the program to maximize the benefits it offers. Here are 7 steps to implement those keys:

1) Make a list of the most important things to you regarding an EMR. For example, if you don't do your own billing, you'll want to communicate that immediately to a potential system's sales team so they can connect you with the right product. If the most vital issue to your practice is ensuring that you don't use expired authorizations or that you can run a report showing which clients have no-showed for appointments, you need to let your prospective EHRs know immediately, so you don't waste time considering software that can't do what you need most. Once you can identify what you require as the backbone of your practice, you'll have a much easier time weeding out systems that may not deliver what you need. (continue reading ...)
