Mental Health Services in Canada: Immigrants and Refugees

Currently, immigrants make up more than 20% of Canada's population, with 1 in 5 people in Canada being foreign born (Government of Canada, Statistics).

With such a high percentage of immigrant and refugee populations, it's vital for Canadian mental health providers to understand how cultural factors affect mental health services - as culture plays a large role in how we perceive health and wellness.

When looking at immigration, for example, clinicians should be aware of the difference between Canadian perceptions of mental health and the mental health perception of an immigrant's native culture.

When working with migrant populations, mental health professions should a) be familiar with their patient's country of origins and that cultures' perceptions of mental health and b) be familiar with the immigration process of their patient - as it has many different faces – and how that process might impact the client's mental health needs. Devon, J.

"We recently went through Journey Road's first CARF International survey and, yesterday, we received great news that we are now CARF accredited.

It required developing policy and procedure manuals, the employee handbook, and investing and implementing SaaS in Payroll/HR, LMS, and EHR; as well as HIPAA compliant, business class office suite (M365) and networks...and thanks to Marisa Thompson for working with us on contracting with and implementing our Electronic Health Record PIMSY EHR (by Smoky Mountain Information Systems, Inc)!"

To your success!
