

Encryption: What Are You Waiting For?

No, seriously, what is keeping you from complete HIPAA compliance? Are you afraid it will cost too much and take up too much of your time? Do you know it's not that difficult to be fully compliant - and it is very important for your survival as a business?

Data Encryption for HIPAA Compliance

We have posted several articles about HIPAA compliance and how to get there; but do you know how it affects your bottom line? For example, encryption of hard drives (computers and laptops), portable drives (flash drives or other mobile technology) and email.

All of these are subject to improper use and hacking that can cost your entire business enough to shut you down. Yes, there is some fear but many of the solutions are not too difficult to carry out.

According to DataMotion, the average cost of resolving a data breach has reached nearly \$4 million . . . encryption provides additional gains often overlooked.

When your equipment and email are encrypted, it sends a message to others that you are serious about your business, protecting the privacy and security of your clients' information.

It can also rank you higher in the marketplace for having up-to-date technology. Encrypted email can strengthen your relationships + reputation and, of course, it protects you from awful, expensive audits.

So how do you encrypt your drives? What kinds of problems can it create?
